

Eternity Rising: Kingdom Rising Book Two

Misha Heath (usually known as just Ish) is the creator of the Eretz-Ish books. A phenomenally successful series of novels about another universe. They make her a lot of money (which she likes) and generate a lot of publicity (which she doesn't like). Then, with no warning, some of the less pleasant characters from these books appear in the real world (or the Forbidden Territory as they call it) and affect a ruthless and terrifying take-over. The human race is unprepared and, as her son Sandy points out, gives up so easily we ought to be ashamed of ourselves. Had Ish's books been less well known, the coincidence of her main villains conquering the Earth might have been missed. However her books are well known, and the words gross treason on a planetary scale are bandied about by everyone from the government (what's left of it) to the children in Sandy's school. The real trouble is, Ish and her whole family, her husband Rick and her children, Sandy and Joan, are not ordinary people. They are Bachirim, chosen ones born to fight on the front lines of the war between the Kingdom that wants the human race to reach their full, glorious potential, and the Kingdom that revels in its destruction. That's her real job, her real mission. Not, as Rick points out, writing some dreadful sub-star-trek rubbish. Demons are a horrible race. They get in to a person through evil thoughts, then, once inside, they slowly spread, like an infection, and the person's mind becomes more and more shaped by its demonic guest. They don't do the full head-turning possession thing these days, too many psychiatrists and drugs and interested satellite television channels. But the demons, the Mazikim as they're properly called, are still advancing their kingdom. Then Ish's creation breaks through to the real world and the Mazikim find a whole army of huge, genetically superior creatures that are so easy to possess they dont even fight. True, theres no fun in corrupting them, no fun slowly ruining their lives, but its too good an opportunity to miss. The human race is no longer master of the earth, and the terror and confusion are delicious. One of the Mazik captains decides to take a closer look at the woman who had enough power to create a whole universe and discovers that, godlike power she might have, but Ish is no god of her creation. In fact, the very idea of that responsibility frightens her. Yes, Ish knew her world was real because she was only writing the things she saw and experienced when she was there, but she was pretty sure shed made it impossible for her two worlds to touch. As the battle for Ishs universe deepens, the question is raised; which is most dangerous? The seven thousand year old demonic kingdom, or one womans imagination?
