

Work from HOME: Home career opportunities

There's a certain appeal to working from home, particularly if you're starting a second career, or kicking off a working in retirement sideline. In today's job market, lots of people are finding ways to do just that. Most home-based jobs come with flexible or part-time schedules. Across age groups and job categories, demand is growing for good-paying work that can be done right from home. Nervous about falling 401ks, boomers hope to continue earning income without the hours or stress of office life. Gen Xers, often caring for elderly parents or young children, are thirsty for flexibility. And younger cohorts are attracted to free agency more than ever.

There's less willingness today to be a cube-dweller or lifetime commuter, says Michael Haaren, co-director of RatRaceRebellion.com and co-author of Work at Home Now. Being able to work from home makes life easier and appeals to the latent entrepreneur. While there may be a tradeoff to working at home—a salary haircut and less advancement potential—a surprising amount and variation of well-paying professional jobs have a two-second commute. From the health, tech and creative industries, good at-home jobs are springing up everywhere.?
